

April 2024
Overall, I believe this is more good news...
I can't find any CPE estimate for this quarter's Tariff changes but I estimate that Category M prices are down between 6 and 7% and with Category A up by around 2%, the overall effect appears to be a slight reduction in the primary care drugs bill for Drug Tariff items of around 3%.
Some specific price changes follow, in BNF order:
First one to note might be that omeprazole 40mg has changed category from M to A and has risen to 1041, for just 7 capsules.
After commenting last time about my disappointment that the price of ranolazine was slow to drop, this quarter all strengths have entered Category M and dropped by over 60% which should provide some useful savings.
Apixaban has fallen again, by another 40% so e.g. 28 days of 5mg twice a day now less than £3. Rivaroxaban is the next DOAC price to keep an eye on :-)
Perhaps after recent concessions, it is unsurprising to see ezetimibe 10mg tablets more than double to 317 although this is still far below those concession prices.
Melatonin 2mg m/r tablets have dropped yet again, now to 396 for 28.
Atomoxetine rises again, in a range of 2-6% depending on strength.
Riluzole 50mg tablets have reduced slightly but are still very expensive compared to what they used to be.
Sitagliptin tablets are down again, with all strengths now less than £4 for a month's supply..
Liothyronine 20mcg tablets have moved from Category M to A and the price has gone up by more than half to 6232 for 28.
Desmopressin 10mcg nasal spray is another M to A mover with a large price increase - this time by 72% to 3711.
Duloxetine 20mg capsules have more than tripled in price to 622, making them more expensive than 40mg.
An A to M mover with a large drop are chloramphenicol 0.5% eye drops which drop over 80% to 180.
I end on another price increase: sodium cromoglycate eye drops have nearly doubled in price to 471.
Back in 3 months' time, maybe sooner if there are significant changes.
